Dress Goods Departments Are Being Shown This Year.

These beautiful autumn days, no doubt. are acceptable to humanity at large, but if the retail merchant had his say about it, appearance of winter. It will take the cold reduce the stock in the cloak and winter garments department. However, ment, considerable in advance of last year, triple the receipts of last year. The class of goods sold this year is better and the

These garments and button near the side with large pearl the three-quarter length English box coat made of good quality cloth and must be perfectly tailored, or, otherwise, to become common. It is a popular style at present, but while the effective styles of jacket is kept in the foreground by its own intrinsic beauty and its adaptability to a is little cause for alarm. Long capes are and are cut broad on the shoulder. All the and gracefully. The inner garments are supposed to be cut closer, but the breadth and grace of the outer wrap must not be perb lace and embroidered wraps are being shown for evening wear, many all flitter capes with deep flounces of chiffon, some still, are those of alternate puffings of Brussels net, flitter and chinchilla fur. Whole capes of fur and handsome stoles, which almost reach the ground, and tails to match, of various skins, are being sold at prices to suit the pocketbook of the masses. of the morning as heretofore. which are priced as high as $800 at the different big stores.

DRESS-GOODS DEPARTMENT. In the dress-goods department the assortof these, with the large floral design with tered, imparting the required "en relief" effect to the flowers. A very handsome black silk crepon has flitter woven into the cloth, giving a polka-dot effect, which sparkles in the light. Another handsome pattern is of purple zibeline cloth, with a Persian plush stripe about three inches wide. The patterns sells for $28.50. Another extreme novelty shown is a French foulard camel's-hair, with a camel's-hair polka dot, which will sell at $16 for the pattern. A peculiar cloth shown is called chameleon cloth, named from the little animal, and it has all the colors of a chameleon. Skirt patterns of this retail at $28. A pretty etimine in black is shown, with a narrow green stripe, bayadere effect, which comes to $2.50 for the pattern. Homespun, with a large chenille dot, is very fashonable and comes in a peculiar shade of brown with a back dot. This pattern retails for $26. The rage for hand-painted fabrics has grown to be a prevailing one, and some exquisite patterns of this kind of decoration are to be seen. The designs most frequently used are floral designs in the fleur de lis or iris, with the flowers and foliage in their natural colors. A pretty thing which is shown and entirely new is called filet. It is a drapery for the skirt of evening gowns of silk with long fringe, The patterns come for both the corsage and skirt, and sell for $42 for the pattern, or for the skirt alone $28. They come in different light colors and make a handsome decoration. Black brussels net for evening dresses, with flitter and cut-steel designs, sell from $19.50 to $50 for the pattern. A pretty grenadine shown for an evening dress has three pink satin stripes about an inch wide and a strip of insertion about two inches wide. Other handsome novelties set in and outlined with a floral design embroidered in the natural colors. There are several other equally pretty designs. One, which bears mention, is of pearl taffeta, with a design in open work, the entire being embroidered in pink and pearl. An allover renaissance shown has white silk designs, hand-painted in colors, to be used for trimming or evening gown. This sells for $12.50 per yard. Ornaments for the hair seem to be more in demand than any other article of jewelry, to judge by the variety of these baubles being displayed in the shops. A pair of diamond wings, movable at any angle, are to be worn with a feather aigrette, and a delicate aigrette shown has exquisite jewels on quivering stems. Then the wired bows are also worn and seem to be very popular.

THE DUC D'ORLEANS. Not a Popular Man Among His English Neighbors.

London Letter in Philadelphia Inquirer. The forthcoming French royal marriage at the country seat of the Duc d'Orleans, near Twickenham, is apt to make but a slight stir here, so far as the bridegroom concerned, for the Princess Isabella person as the King of Portugal or the possible heir to the Italian throne, the men who led her sisters to the altar. Her husband is to be Prince Jean de Chartres, so that the wedding will be something of a family affair. It is not unlikely, by the way, that the visit of Prince Henri d'Orleans to the Spanish court may result in his becoming engaged to one of the King of wedding is the great unpopularity of the Duc d'Orleans among his English neighbors, and it is well known that he is de tested at court, perhaps for personal reasons, and again perhaps because the English court being so thoroughly German, the pretender to the French throne is naturaly a person not to be admired. A gentleman who recently drove by one of the duke's sporting estates says: "I was astonished to see field after field, wood after wood, inclosed with strong wire fencing, about ten feet high, so closely made that not even a weasel could creep through, and surmounted at the top with barbed wire. On inquiring to whom the land be-longed, I was told it was Wood Norton, the estate left by the Duc d'Aumale to the Duc d'Orleans, and that his Royal Highness had surrounded about seven miles of the land with this iron palisading, which he had had made in France, and put up by French workmen. 'Is the duke liked in the neighborhood?'

'Liked! Well, I hardly fancy he is a persona grata in these parts. Do you know what the people say apropos of this fenc-ing? They say. "The land bain't God's! It

The duke has recently been severely criticised in France for accepting large sums of money from ladies, to further the Royalist cause, but in this, Crawford, the clever Paris correspondent, points out: "He has the example of the Comte de Paris in his favor." ### English Experiment in Saloons.

New York Medical Record. The English papers record the opening of a new saloon (public house in England) at Grayshot, in Hampshire. In itself this is not so unusual an event as to justify notice even in the last week of August. What gives it interest is the exceptional character of the house. The "Fox and Pelican" is a gested by the bishop of Chester, and already in operation on a small scale under the control of an association of which he is president. The object of the association is to turn saloons into refreshment rooms, to push the sale of food and nonintoxicating drinks, in comparison with that of alcohol, and to exact from the customers a stricter observance of order and decency. The association and its kindred houses mean to wage war with drunkenness and rowdyism, while giving decent people, whether workers or wayfarers, all that they can get at a saloon and something more besides. The way in which they mainly hope to secure these ends is by enlisting the interest of the manager on their side. He is charged for alcoholic drink the full retail price, and on nonalcoholic beverages he is charged such a rate as to enable him to make a profit of 20 per cent. He has a positive inducement, therefore, to push the consumption of the latter, and none at all to push the consumption of the former. Add to this that he is paid a good salary, and is constantly urged by his employers to be very strict in keeping order and in refusing to serve drunken people, and we have the main particulars of the scheme. This plan reminds us somewhat of the tea saloons recently established in New York; the only difference is that in the New York tea saloons no alcoholic beverage is sold at all. But at any rate the object is the same, and it goes to show that the tendency of the times is, in both Great Britain and the United States, to restrain'as much as possible the drinking habits of the people.
